Currently, the text translation only uses characters from Romance Languages, are more diverse characters important to add, or is being phonetically accurate enough?

- For the time being, it might be important to lock things down in the Romance Languages first. Characters in other languages could be harder to parse and should be addressed after foundations are placed.

The results from the transcription are sent to the user's email rather than downloaded directly to the user's computer, should we change this for convenience or would it be better for the user's peace of mind to send the files to their email?

- As a user, I'd prefer an emailed version initially. It should be simple enough to copy and paste. Perhaps you could implement a downloadable feature?

We've been having some trouble getting the more esoteric languages for our language testing and our sponsor GREATLY prefers personal interviews as a method of testing. Any ideas?

- A forum might be a great way to reach out to native speakers of other languages. Reddit would probably be a good start. I will also put you in touch with my Bulgarian friend Stilyan Dimitrov to get you kicked off on interviews.
